DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Elliott-Bester House is located on the southwest corner of the intersection of Baltimore and South Potomac Streets in Hagerstown, Washington County, Maryland. Its facade faces east, toward Potomac Street.

The two-story brick dwelling is seven bays in length, including a two-bay addition at its south end. It is painted yellow and is trimmed with black and white. A two-story four-bay ell extends to the rear or north of the main structure. To this ell is attached an early twentieth century concrete block addition which housed the Bester florist business.

Set on low stone foundations, the bricks of the original section of the facade, or east, wall and the north gable wall are laid in Flemish bond. Other walls display common bond brick work. A quarter round molded brick water table extends along the facade.

The windows, under segmental brick arches contain two over two pane Victorian period sashes. They are flanked with paneled shutters at the first story and louvered shutters at the second floor level. A large store window has been installed in the bays north of the main entrance.

The two entrances in the facade are topped with late nineteenth century bracketed hoods. Wide transoms are present over the doors. The original front door is in the second bay from the north end of the house.

Three chimneys are present, of varying size but all with corbeled caps. They rise from inside the north and south gable ends with a large flue projecting from the original south gable end. The slate roof is broken by two projecting gables with carved decorative trim. Other exterior woodwork associated with the eaves is of the Victorian period.

The original appearance of the house was altered greatly during the late nineteenth century. Changes to the building include replacement of original windows, frames and doors, the addition of an entrance in the facade, the construction of the two projecting gables in the roof line at the front of the house and the addition of the two south bays.

Much of the interior of the house has also been altered. Changes have been made to the woodwork and floors as well as to the floor plan of the building. The major alterations appear to date from the late nineteenth century.

Some original interior woodwork is present in all rooms and in the stair hall. Most of the alterations to the woodwork occur at the first story although some original molded cornice (of wood) and doors with six raised panels remain. At the second story level the southeast room has original wood sheathing on the fireplace wall, consisting of raised panels with plain quarter round molding. The southwest room is treated similarly with paneling confined to the chimney breast and adjacent cupboards.

The significance of the Elliott-Bester House lies in its architectural and historic merit. With its remaining original woodwork and interior and exterior detail reflecting eighteenth century formal design, the house is an excellent example of a dwelling built early in western Maryland's architectural history. Since bricks apparently did not become a prevalent building material in Washington County until after 1800, the Elliott-Bester House with a probable late eighteenth century building date is particularly outstanding.

Historically, the house is important for its association with Commodore Jesse D. Elliott who spent his boyhood years there. Elliott is remembered in military history for his distinguished role in the Battle of Lake Erie with Commodore Oliver H. Perry during the War of 1812.

Jesse Duncan Elliott was born on July 14, 1782. The Elliotts were a Scotch-Irish family who migrated from Donegal in the north of Ireland to Pennsylvania.

After studying law at Dickinson College in Carlisle, Pennsylvania, Elliott received a commission in the navy as a midshipman. During the Battle of Lake Erie, on September 10, 1813, Elliott commanded the "Niagra" where his strategic actions are recognized as leading to victory in the battle.

By 1818 a controversy had begun concerning Elliott's conduct during the Battle of Lake Erie which subsequently resulted in a court-martial and his suspension from the navy in 1840. In 1843 Elliott's case was reheard and he was reinstated at his former rank. He was appointed to the command of the Philadelphia Navy Yard and died there December 10, 1845.

In addition to his role in the Battle of Lake Erie, Elliott served in the Mediterranean. He was put in command of the naval forces in the West Indies and the Gulf of Mexico in 1829. He led naval forces at Charleston, South Carolina, and later took charge of the Boston Navy Yard. Elliott then sailed to the Mediterranean again where he was in command of the navy squadron there. In 1839 he returned to the U.S. where he remained until his death.

An account of the Battle of Lake Erie from Elliott's memoirs along with biographical information is printed in Thomas Scharf, History of Western Maryland.

Preliminary Report

Elliott-Best & House 203-205 South Potomac Street Hagerstown, Maryland

On 1 March 1974, I inspected the Elliott-Bester House with Mrs. Paula Dickey, Mrs. Wanda Allenback and Mr. Donald Frush. The purpose of the inspection was to familiarize me with the house so I could advise on proposed scopes of restoration and identify the original design and the changes.

The original plans of the first and second storeys, the design of the street facade(s), a recommended scope of restoration and its estimated cost, are desired at this time.

The structure, as it exists, appears as two row houses. Closer examination reveals that the two southerly (left end) bays were added, creating a seven bay structure; another front door, similar to the (remodeled) one in the center of the original five bays, two steep gables in the roof, 2/2 windows of a size different from the originals, were all added, c. 1880-1900. This remodeling, changing one house into two, with the picturesque gables in the attic storey, was rather ingenious; it was well done.

The cleverness of the exterior alterations, and two marblized slate mantels are about the only noteworthy features of the altered house. It is desired to restore the house to its earlier period. Although current preservation philosophy favors retention of later alterations, in many cases, a restoration to the earlier period seems justified in this case, if its future use will not be limited by such a restoration, because of the uninteresting quality of most of the altered work, and the extent of original work which remains.

The slate mantels, the later interior doors and hardware, and the two front doors and entrance surrounds, should be removed carefully and saved for a 19th century preservation effort in town.

Every window appears to be altered, both in width, height and in design; this is the most significant loss. Some windows have one unaltered masonry jamb (as would be expected) but some have no unaltered jambs; this suggests that the location of neither original jamb suited the alterer, although one questions if just a few inches one way or the other would matter to anyone, or that no window existed at that location previous to the alteration. Certain pecularities in the floor plan, which will be discussed when the plans are drawn, suggest the latter, but the elimination of all windows with no original jamb creates other conditions difficult to accept as original. Except for the windows, enough original work of all types survives to achieve a relatively authentic restoration. Two mantels have been replaced, but four others survive, unaltered; many original doors survive, all of the same design, suggesting that all doors were identical; much door trim survives, as does baseboard, chair rail and interior cornicework; while the staircase from the first floor to the landing below the second floor has been removed, the stair and bannister-work survive unaltered from the landing to the third floor; while nearly all original hardware is missing, its outlines clearly show on every door. Later partitions are easily distinguished from originals, and few are missing altogether.

The whole structure appears sound, and no alarming settlements were noted.

The general design of interior millwork suggests a date no earlier than the third quarter of the 18th century, and, in Western Maryland, probably in the fourth quarter. I have seen the same early millwork used in the early 19th century, as well. The use of wrought nails in all early work suggests the 18th century, however. The street (east) front and north end are laid in Flemish bond, and the other two sides are in common, with frequently recurring courses of headers. Such brickwork is characteristic of the late 18th and early 19th centuries, although dated examples are known well back into the 18th century. Joints are tooled to a pointed profile, rather than the customary "grapevine", a characteristic of early stonemasonry in Maryland and Pennsylvania.

As the reliable and comfortable 1798 tax records seem not to exist for Washington County, the determination of the date, and the windows will be difficult. Much additional research on the building is, of course, necessary, and more clues may be found; similar buildings in the area, or in the vicinity of the builders' birthplace, may suggest answers.

This is but a preliminary report of my inspection. I spent the afternoon in the house, measuring the exterior horizontal dimensions, and sketching the interior floor plans, noting original and later features visible at this time. With Mr. Frush standing by, I made several test holes through plaster finish to determine the relative age of several questionable partitions in the second storey.

The next part of this report will include the floor plans with a preliminary conjecture of their original design, one or more preliminary conjectures of the original design of the street (east) elevation, and broad estimates of restoration costs.

PRELIMINARY REPORT

Part II

Elliott-Bester House

Hagerstown, Maryland

This second part of the preliminary report on the Elliott-Bester House, the first part of which was written immediately after my inspection of the house on 1 March 1974, will discuss, in more detail, some points raised in the first part of the report, and will make some basic conclusions, all of which will be subject to further research.

Basic Structure

Exterior walls are all brick. The easterly portion of the rear wing appears early, probably slightly later than the house, however. The westerly portion, and the south addition appear to be of the late 19th or early 20th century.

The house is framed with two girders in every floor, extending north-south, as indicated by the pairs of dashed lines, with joists (invisible except in the cellar) from exterior walls to the girders, east-west. In the cellar, the first floor joists appear to be logs, laid quite close together, with the space between them filled with small rocks and mortar.

First Floor

Partitions appear to have been added for various functions, rather than removed: a vestibule was formed in the southeast corner, a stair was introduced and enclosed in the southwest room, and the main stair was rebuilt and enclosed in the center hall. Doorways between rooms are probably widened versions of typical doors, although, at this time, no evidence supports or denies doors between rooms.

An eliptically arched transom, now unglazed, forms part of a backdrop behind the big northeast show window. Mr. Frush says that it is said to have come from the center hall, just east of the staircase. Its 5'-7" width would fit in the 6'-11" wide hall and it could be believable in this period house in this location, with doors, or a door and sidelights, beneath; in this location, it would be very stylish, more stylish than the original woodwork elsewhere in the house, perhaps more stylish than would be expected. In this location, it suggests that the structure had more than one function, such as residential and business. The transom, or a similar transom, could have been above the front door, or doors, in the exterior wall. Examination behind existing finishes in the hall should determine the presence or absence of a transom near the stair.

The absence of a fireplace in the northeast room (and the absence of evidence in the cellar and in the second storey) suggests a function quite different from the other rooms. While stoves were available in the late 18th century, why would this room (and the one above it) be designed for them unless its different function so suggested? Would the latest style, alone, suggest so drastic a difference in basic construction? Was the builder experimenting in these two rooms with this improvement in heating?

The original mantel remains at the northwest fireplace, and original cornices remain in the northwest, southeast and southwest rooms. Chair rail, generally, has been removed, but its evidence remains.

The two mantels of the south rooms are slate painted in imitation of marble; they are in good condition and are good examples of this kind of work, dating from the late 19th century, but rarely found in good condition.

Modern finishes and uses prevent examination for cupboards beside the chimney breasts. The remaining cupboard beside the southwest chimney is at least partly original.

Likewise, existing finishes prevent a determination of the relative date and shape of the south wall's masonry openings. Only one front window remains, at a "typical" size; its south jamb appears original but the north jamb has been rebuilt.

In the north facade, the door near the northeast corner was originally a window; the west jamb of the west window, and the east jamb of the east door (at least to window sill height) appear original, while the other jambs appear rebuilt.

Second Floor

All mantels are original; stairwork, from the landing clear to the third storey, is original. Many doors, and much door trim remains from original construction. Doors were hung on long strap hinges, but butt hinges have replaced all original straps and pintels. Door 206 is interesting in that it is an early glazed door, apparently out of context.

The doors shown open in the conjectured plan are those which exhibit original trim, or which otherwise seem logical to assume as original, at this time. , except for 'b', contain original doors, The partitions shown chair rail (or evidence thereof) and handsplit lathing with wrought nails. Partition 'b' is non-existent. The acceptance of the diagonal partition at 'a' as original suggests, as its reason for being diagonal, the Door 202, still with original trim. The Door 203 has been entirely eliminated by the alterations, but it is in evidence. All partitions indicated by 'c' have sawn lathe and no evidence of chair rail, hence the preliminary conclusion that they are later additions in their entirety, hence the conclusion that a partition existed at 'b' to justify both doors 202 and 203, which required the original diagonal wall. There is the slightest indication of partition 'b' on the original floorboards. Partition 'b' would not allow Window 203 to exist at its present size. There are probably other partition arrangements which could be conjectured; this one seems the simplest.

Both masonry jambs of Window 203 appear rebuilt. At Window 202, the south jamb only appears original and at Window 204, the north jamb only appears original. Neither jamb of Window 201 and 205 appears original. Does this suggest that windows existed only at 202 and 204, and that they were wider or narrower than the existing masonry openings (3'-1") and that the alterer accepted one jamb? Accepting as original only windows with one original jamb allows but one window in the southeast room, hardly logical. Why would one jamb not have survived at the other windows? The most logical preliminary conclusion is that there were four windows on the second storey front facade, each masonry opening slightly wider than the existing.

The east jamb of Window 206, and the west jamb of Window 207 are original.

At 'd', a line in the floor and evidence on the walls, indicates builtin cupboards matching those east of the chimney breast. The doors to the small cupboard now opening into the corridor are original, but out of context.

The resulting very large room in the northeast corner has no fireplace, and there is no evidence of one. Enough finishes appear original to conclude, preliminarily, that there was never a fireplace in this room. Like the room beneath it, was it for a special purpose, different from the other rooms in this storey?

Restoration Budget

Although many fragments of original work remain throughout the house, the alterations should be considered more "extensive" than "minimal." Altered work can be differentiated clearly from original, and there is every reason to expect clear signs of missing work with normal architectural research on the building except for one detail, unfortunately, a most important one—the windows. All masonry openings appear to have been altered (although not all have been examined exhaustively) and at this time it is not known if more than a conjecture can be determined. Possibly, an unaltered masonry opening exists hidden by one of the additions or by one of the front entrance surrounds. Possibly fragments of an original window unit will be found in the building—part of a frame or sill used as blocking behind later finished work, or such a part, or a sash, stored in the cellar, which is full of stored materials, much of which appear original to this house.

Architectural research before, and concurrent with, removals of later work is essential to this project, and will be a major part of architectural services.

The following broad estimates assume as authentic a restoration as possible to the period of original construction, with the possible retention of the earliest portion of the rear wing.

Phase	Description	Construction Budget	Architect's Fees
I	Research: measured drawings, removal of later work, determination of original scheme, details	$8,000	$4 , 000
II	Development: proposed use, or adaptive use of house, as allowed by house itself		750.

Phase	Description	Construction Budget 2	Architect's Fees
III	Contract Documents: drawings and specifications, including details of all work, for restoration and adaptation		$5,000
	Mechanical and Electrical Engineering Contract Documents		3,500.
IA	Bidding or Negotiation: acquiring a contract for the restoration work		750.
V	Restoration Construction: Actual con- struction, with the Architect's in- spection of construction, interpreting new evidence found, revising details, a	and
•	contract administration	$140,000 to 180,000	$4,000.

1. Excluding Architect's travel, and out-of-pocket expenses

2. Excluding extensive work on site

Archaeology should be considered to determine outbuildings and other items of site design, even if the program cannot include restoration of these features. The services of a professional archaeologist should be engaged.

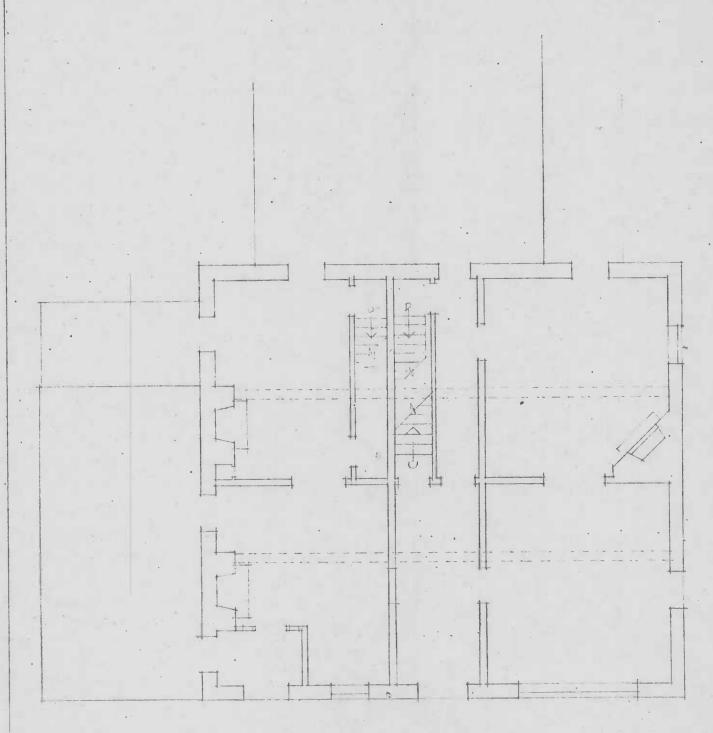

Additional historical research is required to find every possible detail which might ever have been written about this structure. The services of a professional historian should be engaged.
